The May 17 meeting was also the occasion for wishing the Andersons well in their home in northern Michigan. A citation was presented to them.

Farewell, Alloa and Leigh

The following was contributed by a member and speaks for all of the Society.

St. Augustine's poem, "What does Love Look Like?" answers; "It Has the Hands to Help Others...That's What Love Looks Like." We have been fortunate to have known two special people, Alloa and Leigh Anderson, who meet St. Augustine's description.

Our retiring president of the Society and his wife gave the lasting gift of themselves to our Society. They were founding members, and in the beginnings of the Society offered their home and hospitality for monthly meetings. They served, with distinction, many roles in the Society. They were officers, advisors, writers, speakers and teachers for us.

How can we thank these two kind members for the help they have given us? We can only say- we know what love looks like! May they find this love returned in the Dune House. Goodbye and thank you, Alloa and Leigh. CC.

A Review of 1980-81 Programs

Sept. 28, 1980 - James Minton, "Maps in Genealogy", in Hatcher Library, U of M Map Room. Mr. Minton described types of maps, cataloging, seeking help from staff, and general guidelines for use.

Oct. 26, 1980 - Francis X. Blouin, Assoc.Professor and Assoc. Archivist at Bentley Library, "Surveying Your Ethnic Ancestors". He described the use of collected letters from immigrants to "the folks back home" to gain a picture of early Michigan. The Library has had cooperation from some European countries in copying such manuscripts.

Dec. 7, 1980 - Question and Answer. The membership exchanged helpful experiences and reference information in answer to many common problem-type questions. A healthy and helpful co-worker atmosphere prevailed.

Jan. 25, 1981 - Al Blixt discussed the historical development of photography and pointed out characteristics of the various methods as guides to identifying the dates of pictures for genealogical purposes.

Feb. 22, 1981 - Wilton Chamberlain, "Family Research in France". Mr. Chamberlain's mother was an ardent and successful genealogist of the Chamberlain family into France. He has continued the work and research through which he has developed a unique perspective of genealogy.

March 22, 1981 - Dr. John Dann, Curator, Clements Library, U of M, "Clues for Genealogists in American History". Discussing the effects of wars on a developing nation, he described the manner in which many migratory patterns of movement and settlement developed to produce land records and clues for genealogists.

April 26, 1981 - Alloa Anderson, member, "How to Join an Hereditary Society". She cited historical beginnings of several early hereditary organizations which were frequently compensatory or honorary for military service. Many changes have taken place but for most, genealogy is a first credential to becoming a member.

May 17,1981 - Dr. David Pollock, WCC, "300 Years of American Newspapers". Mr. Pollock used slides and pointed out that newspapers over the years have been political and have recorded history from various views. Many are on microfilm and are available through inter-library exchange from the State Library.

Michigan Surname Index

Chairman Dick Miller has cards and will give instructions on their use for all who wish to contribute to the Michigan Surname Index. These cards should be filled out in duplicate and typed if possible.The cards are in a set of 6 which should be kept intact for ease of handling. You will note that if using a typewriter it is not easy to fill out the last line on the bottom 2 cards. Perhaps this line can be completed by hand. Additional information may be added to the back of cards. Dick will give you a code number. One set of your cards will be kept by the Society and one set will be sent to the State Library. By entering cards in this index you agree to answer queries which may come to you.

The State Library has 16,000 cards at present from 293 members representing 28 societies. The Michigan Genealogical Council is planning to publish the entire index and hopes to have all 44 societies well represented. If you wish your names to be included your cards must be in Dick's hands well before January 1, 1982 to allow for processing. If you have questions concerning cards previously turned in, call Dick at 663-2825, or write to him at 615 River View Drive, Ann Arbor, MI.48104.

All members including those out of town are invited to become part of this project.

Volunteers Needed for Projects

Michigan Genealogical Council has 2 projects which need volunteer help. The Federal Land Records for the State of Michigan have been microfilmed. Help is needed to edit and create a useful index which will be housed at the State Library. Our Society has been asked to send 1 or 2 carloads of helpers to the Library on August 6 to work during the morning on the Centennial Certificate File. The group will remain at the Library in the afternoon for personal research.

If you can help with either of these projects call Alvin Joslyn or Ed Sayer.

Material Needed for Family History Capers

If you know of records which have not been published and that you can copy for our quarterly, please call the Editor. If you are willing to copy records but need a suggestion, consult our list. If you can give help, or know of someone who can help in preparing our "township specials", please let us know.

PLANNING AND TAKING RESEARCH TRIPS

by Frances Gardner

My most important advice in planning a trip for genealogical research is to plan as far ahead as possible for there is much that can and should be done in the excellent area libraries at our disposal.

Last year I talked on learning to use libraries and discussed those in Ann Arbor and nearby. I trust you have been using them. If you expect to use libraries on your trip it is essential that you become at home in them before you visit new and unfamiliar ones.

You will no doubt find some records available only on microfilm or microfiche. In the Ann Arbor Public Library or the Microform Room at Hatcher Graduate Library use the microfilm reader if only to become familiar with it. A word of warning - not all readers thread alike. I still have trouble with the type of machine at the Michigan State Library. Microfiche machines are at Hatcher and the Mormon branch library in Westland, which also has microfilm readers. More and more materials are being added to libraries in microfilm or microfiche. Some of the Pennsylvania county histories I wanted to see at the Mich. State Library were only on microfilm. One noteworthy addition to the Hatcher collection within the past year is the title, County histories of the Old Northwest. Series V: Michigan, on 88 reels of microfilm.

There are many reference books in local libraries which will be invaluable in planning and preparing for your trip.

You will need to write letters of inquiry to libraries, museums, historical societies, court houses, etc. For addresses, consult the following:

You may want to visit cemeteries. The cemetery record compendium, comp. by John D. Stemmons, is in our Society's collection. This is by no means a directory of all cemteries. Instead, it is a directory of the cemeteries for which there are records available and where they may be located. For a complete list of the cemeteries in the locality of interest to you, you may have to contact a genealogical society in the area. For example, our Society has published the Directory of cemeteries of Washtenaw County, Michigan. Also it may be that a society has read local cemeteries which are not listed in the compendium, but may appear in print in the society's publication. The compendium was copyrighted in 1979.

If you have time on your trip to a locality of interest, especially if you might be staying with relatives or friends, in which case the daily expenses are not so great, it would be worth while to search old files of area newspapers for items of interest. It will be less time consuming and more rewarding if you have the exact date of a marriage, death, family reunion, birthday celebration in the case of an old-timer, golden wedding anniversary, etc.

The following publications will help you ascertain what newspapers have been published and their time spans:

Brigham, Clarence Saunders, History and bibliography of American newspapers, 1690-1820. 1947 H
_ _ _ _ _ _ _ _ Additions and Corrections..... 1961. H
American newspapers, 1821-1936; a union list of files available in the U.S. and Canada. 1967 H.
Directory of newspaper libraries in the U.S. and Canada. 1976. A, H.
U.S.Library of Congress. Check list of American eighteenth century newspapers in the Library of Congress. 1912. A, H.
Ayer, firm... N.W.Ayer & Son's Directory of newspapers and periodicals; a guide to publications printed in the U.S...Canada... A, H.

State libraries and archives and large libraries would have newspaper files and even small libraries might have area newspapers either in the original or on microfilm. Inquire locally for indexes comparable to Louis Doll's index to early Washtenaw County newspapers. Some libraries have indexed newspapers. I have used the extensive card file to names in the area papers in the Genealogy Dept. of the South Bend Public Library.

It goes without saying that ideally one should exhaust local and area sources before starting on a long trip, especially in view of the high costs involved in travel.

I suggest that from this area you go on one-day trips to:

1) The Burton Historical Collection in the Detroit Public Library. Keep in mind that it is now closed Sunday and Monday and on Wednesday it does not open until 1:00 p.m. Burton is especially important as a place to become familiar with a specialized department in the field of genealogy. It has not only the usual author-title-subject catalog, but also special types of catalogs which one will encounter in the large genealogy departments or libraries. Become comfortable using them before going to a far-off specialized library.

2) The Michigan State Library in Lansing. Here again, keep in mind that it is only open to the public from 1 - 5 p.m., Monday through Friday. It does not have specialized subject catalogs but there is a fine collection to further your search with a minimum of expense. It is the place to become acquainted with the "divided" catalog. That is, the author and title cards together in one alphabet and the subject cards in a separate alphabetical catalog. Now there is a third place to look for the recently cataloged materials. It is called the "cat-fiche" and is representative of the trend to do away with card catalogs as such. "Cat" stands for catalog and "fiche" for microfiche. There are at least a half-dozen microfiche readers on a table each with a standing file of microfiche sheets beside it. Take out the appropriate one, put it in the machine and you will find, for instance, the books cataloged since last fall having the subject heading Michigan - Genealogy. Copy down the call numbers just as you would from cards in a catalog tray and proceed as usual to locate the books.

The State Library has not only three catalogs, but two classification systems. The bulk of the books are shelved by the Dewey Decimal system, but the books cataloged in the past few years are classified by the Library of Congress system and are shelved separately in a growing section. Thus the Michigan State Library is an excellent place to become familiar with different types of library systems. Unfortunately, a four hour period, the maximum for one day, is not a sufficient period of time to become comfortable using its resources and also to explore its fine collection.

3) The third one-day trip I would suggest is to Toledo to use the Local History and Genealogy Dept. of the Toledo-Lucas County Public Library. I think this is a must for anyone with Ohio roots. It does not have specialized catalogs as Burton does, but, in addition to the usual one-alphabet card catalog, it has a large personal name card file with references even to single pages in books in its collection. Besides the Ohio collection arranged alphabetically by county it has many old plat maps of Ohio counties and the Federal census for Ohio on microfilm. It also has a good collection for the states east of the Mississippi, especially those east and south of Ohio. There is not as large a section of family genealogies as at Burton or the Michigan State Library. However, on my last visit I was surprised to find one of a New England family. I had not located it at Burton or the Michigan State Library through searching their card catalogs. I came upon it when I was browsing the family genealogy shelves in a separate room off the main reading room. That reinforces my contention that one should try to exhaust all area resources before making a trip to distant libraries.

There are also libraries in the Midwest which may be visited on overnight trips of two or three days, namely, the Fort Wayne-Allen County Public Library, Western Reserve Historical Society Library (Cleveland), Ohio Historical Society Library (Columbus), Newberry Library (Chicago), The Indiana State Library and the Ohio State Library. Others could be added to this list.

I recently read the statement that Fort Wayne has the third largest genealogy department in a public library in the country, behind New York and Houston. I can not vouch for the accuracy of this, but I do know it has an excellent collection with many specialized catalog files. It is a closed-stack library, but the service is fast. One has to be able to use the catalogs with ease to get the most out of any closed-stack resource. A Genealogist's Guide to the Fort Wayne, Indiana, Public Library, by Karen B. Cavanaugh, is in our Society's collection. It was copyrighted in 1980 and in January, 1981, the department moved into its quarters in the new wing of the library. I visited there three times last summer, but I have not been there since the opening of the new facilities. I heard there would be more seating space and more microfilm readers so the congestion in this popular library may be somewhat relieved. At the suggestion of Peggy Lambert I stayed the last two times at the TraveLodge Motel, three blocks from the Library. Mention that you have come to use the Genealogy Department at the library and you may get a special rate. We learned that is why we paid less that the published rate!

YPSILANTI HISTORICAL SOCIETY ARCHIVES

The Archives of the Ypsilanti Historical Society holds an extensive Biographical Card file containing over 30,000 individual histories from the 1820's. This is primarily the extensive work of one man, Louis S. White, over a period of 30 years. A typical entry in the Card File will detail date and place of birth, marriage, parents of spouse and place of birth, children-dates and locations of birth, residents and occupations, place of birth.

The Archives are located at 220 North Huron St. in Ypsilanti and open to the public from 9 to 12 A.M. from Monday through Friday. Since the staff is limited you may send request for information to the Genealogical Society of Washtenaw County and we will attempt to assist in the search. Please enclose a SASE.

RESOURCES FOR GENEALOGY AT THE MICHIGAN HISTORICAL COLLECTIONS

by Mary Jo Pugh

The Michigan Historical Collections, established in 1935, seeks to collect, preserve, and make available for research primary source materials documenting the history of the people and the institutions of the state of Michigan. The Michigan Historical Collections also serves as the archives of the University of Michigan. The holdings comprise some 15,000 feet of manuscript material, 30,000 published items, some quarter-million photographs as well as 2,000 maps and newspapers. These materials are particularly valuable for tracing the social and political history of the post-Civil War period in Michigan.

The Michigan Historical Collections is housed in the Bentley Historical Library, built through the generosity of the Friends of the Michigan Historical Collections. The library is located at 1150 Beal Avenue on the North Campus of the University of Michigan. It is open for research from 8:30 to 5:00 Monday through Friday, but reference service is not available during the noon hour. From September through May the library is also open most Saturday mornings from 9:00 to 12:30. The library is a non-circulating, closed-stack research library open to all.

I MANUSCRIPT MATERIALS

Among manuscript materials of particular interest to the genealogist are a substantial collection of Michigan church records, particularly from the Episcopal, Congregational, Presbyterian and Baptist denominations. The records of local churches often contain records of baptisms, marriages, and burials.

The library holds a few censuses, primarily for Washtenaw County. Of particular note for Washtenaw County are the territorial censuses of 1827 and 1834, and the state censuses of 1845, 1884 (incomplete) and 1894. The early censuses give name of the head of the household only. The Graduate Library of the University of Michigan holds microfilm copies of all federal censuses for the state.

The tract records list all transfers from the public domain in Michigan. These records are organized according to the legal description of the land and give the name of the purchaser, acreage, price and date.

The Michigan Historical Collections has relatively few public records as public records are in the custody of the State Archives. For Wastenaw County, however, the Michigan Historical Collections hold some court records, welfare records, election records, school records and tax records. As a general rule the library does not hold birth, marriage or death records.

Nor does the library hold University of Michigan student records. In the nineteenth century the University did not collect information from students of interest to genealogists. The Alumni Records Office at the University collects information about the careers of University graduates after graduation and the Registrar's Office holds student records.

A fortunate genealogist may find family papers at the Michigan Historical Collections. By far the most important component of the Michigan Historical Collections acquisitions program are the personal papers of Michigan residents, anonymous as well as famous.

Manuscript materials are described in the Guide to Manuscripts at the Bentley Historical Library by Thomas E. Powers and William H. McNitt (1976) with more

Mary Jo Pugh is the Reference Archivist for the Michigan Historical Collections, Bentley Historical Library, Ann Arbor, Michigan complete descriptions in the card catalogs and inventories.

II PUBLISHED MATERIALS

The Michigan Historical Collections holds an excellent collection of published material about the state. However, we do not collect published genealogies unless we hold a substantial body of family papers or unless the genealogy contains substantive descriptions of the family or historical events.

City, county, and state histories contain a wealth of biographies of Michigan residents. The Michigan Biographic Index indexes those biographies of five lines or more appearing in the histories published before 1946. Updating this index would be a worthy project for genealogical societies.

City and county directories are important sources for genealogists. The earliest city directory in Michigan is the Detroit directory of 1837. For most other cities the first directory dates after 1860. Gazetteers are specialized directories listing businesses and professional services.

The newspaper collection is extensive for the nineteenth century and is useful for locating death notices, probate notices and advertisements. Marguerite Lambert has indexed many of the newspapers for marriage and death notices.

Land ownership maps and atlases are also useful to the genealogist. The 46 volume set of the service records of Michigan men who served in the Civil War, the Record of Service of Michigan Volunteers in the Civil War, is indexed. The Michigan Pioneer and Historical Collections contains a wealth of information on nineteenth century Michigan. It too is indexed.

University publications can be used to learn about the quality of student life for an ancestor who attended the University even though little strictly genealogical information is available. The Catalogue of Graduates, Non-Graduates, Officers and Members of the Faculties list all persons associated with the University from 1837 - 1921.

A HISTORY OF WASHTENAW COUNTY
by Lydia Muncy

The Beginnings

There is evidence that Indians roamed the area we know as southern Michigan nearly 11,000 years ago. Little is known about them though over the centuries there were several different tribes. Among them were the Tionotiti, known as the Tobacco Indians because they raised tobacco. These groups and others who followed were driven west by the powerful Iroquois. By the time Cadillac built Fort Pontchartrain at Detroit in 1790 to protect the French fur trading posts farther north, there were few Indians in the area we call Washtenaw County. To form a buffer on the west side of his fort, Cadillac invited Indians from Michilimackinac to settle in the area. Chippewa, Potowatomi and Wyandotte responded. The Potowatomi were most numerous in Washtenaw County.

Studies of Indian sites in the county have not as yet found any evidence of large permanent settlements giving rise to the belief that this area was used as hunting grounds for many groups. Washtenaw is crossed by many Indian trails. The Sauk Trail which took a southwesterly path entering the county east of Ypsilanti and leaving south of Bridgewater is part of a great trail extending across the nation. Today it is the route of US 12 in Michigan.

The St. Joseph Trail leaves the Sauk at Ypsilanti and follows a more westerly direction. Present day Saline was so called because of the salt springs to be found where several Indian Trails meet or cross the Sauk Trail. The Potowatomi Trail follows the Huron River.

The Indian felt himself one with the air, the sunlight, the water of a lake or stream, and the life-giving soil. Exclusive ownership of land was entirely foreign to his understanding and belief. When he signed a treaty, in his thinking, he was merely including the white man in a group which might hunt on the land, fish in the stream, raise a garden, but not fence off the land. Herein lay much of the difficulty between the red man and the white.

The French who came to the Great Lakes area were interested in the Indians' furs and their souls. The English were interested in their land. Both debauched the Indians with whiskey, and neither attempted to understand their culture. Some Indians were loyal to the French, some to the English.

By the time Europeans were settling in Michigan, the political and military importance of the Indians was gone. They were reduced to making a living by trading their native products, mainly baskets and furs, by begging or even stealing from the settlers whom many Indians still regarded as their enemies.

The Indians who had been loyal to the English in the War of 1812 made an annual trek to Malden in Ontario to receive a bounty from the English government. Many crossed Washtenaw in making this trip.

Robert Cavalier de LaSalle, with four French companions and a Mohican Indian guide, passed through what is now Washtenaw County in April of 1680. LaSalle was in search of a route to the East Indies. He believed the Mississippi flowed into the Pacific Ocean. In an attempt to reach the Mississippi his ships traveled to the Illinois River. South of Peoria he built a fort on the banks of the Illinois River. Running short of supplies he sent one ship back to Quebec. When the ship did not return he gave it up for lost. Leaving all his garrison except four, he started back in two canoes. When they reached the mouth of the St. Joseph River, he decided to go overland.

After several weeks they reached the Huron River. Two of the men were too ill to travel. While the sick men rested, the others built a canoe. As soon as the sick could travel, they drifted down the river until they came to a barricade of logs. Here they abandoned their canoe and made the rest of the way to the Detroit River on foot. Such accounts left by explorers and priests who roamed Michigan are the only written records of Washtenaw County before settlement by Europeans.

Early Boundaries

Washtenaw County was included in land ceded to the Territorial government in 1807. "Michigan Territory was created in 1805 and included Iowa and Wisconsin. The War of 1812...interrupted surveying activities but when the War was over, there immediately followed a widespread movement to give worthy veterans bonuses by giving them land in the government-owned Public Domain.... Congress in 1815 appropriated for this purpose two million acres of land to be located in Michigan Territory."[1]

The surveyors found the land difficult to survey because of marshes, rivers and lakes, and reported the land "was not worth the expense of surveying it."[1]

An act of the Territorial Legislative Council defined the boundaries of Washtenaw. A proclamation by Governor Cass announced these boundaries September 10, 1822. Added to the present twenty townships were eight in Jackson County, eight in Livingston County, and four in Ingham County, making Washtenaw a county twice its present size. All governmental matters would still be handled by Wayne County.

Early Settlement

More than one hundred years elapsed between LaSalle's trip down the Huron and the establishment of a trading post on the banks of the Huron by several Frenchmen from Detroit led by Gabriel Godfroy. They built a log cabin where the city of Ypsilanti now stands. Their trading venture was short-lived as both Indians and game were moving west.

The first land purchases in Washtenaw County were made in 1822 by Judge Woodward, a Territorial judge, and Eli Kellogg. Neither man ever lived in the county.

Benjamin Woodruff, who purchased land in what is now Ypsilanti Township in 1823, came alone from his home in the East to choose his land. He chose land about a mile downstream from the Godfroy site. The land purchased, he returned to his home, sold his farm and all the belongings he could not take with him and headed west with his wife and six children. When they arrived at Detroit, they made the necessary purchases and loaded all their goods on a boat. This boat sailed down the Detroit River to the mouth of the Huron River and was then poled up the Huron as far as possible. This spot was later called Snow's Landing or Rawsonville. The rest of the trip they made on foot. This first settlement was called Woodruff's Grove. In years to come the Woodruffs made welcome and gave shelter to many later settlers.

John Allen and Elisha Rumsey, one a Virginian and the other from New York State, met as they were making their way to Michigan. They appeared to have common ideas of what they wished their new home to be, and so they teamed up and proceeded together. They came by sleigh in February of 1824 from Detroit and chose a site upstream from Woodruff's Grove. This became Ann Arbor. Mrs. Allen and Mrs. Rumsey were both named Ann. Did the settlement become Ann's Arbor because of the beautiful arbor of trees?

Farther upstream Samuel Dexter purchased land in 1824 and sometime later platted the village of Dexter.

James Stewart and William Harwood are credited with the establishment of a settlement on the site of the Godfroy trading post. At the suggestion of Judge Woodward it was named Ypsilanti in honor of the Greek hero popular at the time. Later Ypsilanti absorbed Woodruff's Grove and adopted the founding date of 1823.

Why did the settlers come? Adventure? Lure of the unknown? Available land? New opportunities? Whatever the reason, the first few years were hard beyond belief. Shelter and food were the first things to take their attention. Logs must be cut to build a house and land must be cleared to plant the seeds they had brought with them. It took at least five days to make the trip to Detroit either by water or by road. It was important to their survival that they become self-sufficient as soon as possible.

Most of the early settlers chose land along or close to a river. Ypsilanti, Ann Arbor, and Dexter were started on the Huron River, Saline and Milan on the Saline River, and Manchester on the Raisin River. The rivers gave them an adequate water supply and fish to supplement their diet. The rivers gave power to operate saw mills which cut their logs into much needed lumber and to operate grist mills to grind their grain into flour and feed for livestock. At one time there were at least 58 mills in the county, the largest number being on the Huron.

Most of the mills are gone though a few continued to operate into the twentieth century. Parker Mill on Fleming Creek continued to supply buckwheat pancake flour into the mid 20th century and the Mann Mill in Manchester still, in 1981, grinds feed for local farmers.

Geddes, Delhi, Hudson Mills and Foster on the Huron River are all place names of forgotten communities which grew up around the mills. This is true of Sharon on the Raisin River and Jerusalem on Mill Creek.

The first wave of settlers were largely from New York and New England. After the opening of the Erie Canal in 1825 travel to Michigan became easier and the settlers came in even greater numbers.

By 1826 there were sufficient people in the county to establish their own government. In November of 1826 the Territorial Legislative Council made Washtenaw a separate county with its first term of court to begin the third Thursday of January, 1827. At that time Washtenaw was divided into three large townships-Ypsilanti, Ann Arbor, and Dexter.

Among the early settlers "some were aggressive entrepreneurs who saw the frontier as an area in which to make a large amount of money quickly in land speculation." 2 One of those entrepreneurs was John Allen. He and Elisha Rumsey "chose their site well, but what virtually assured the permanency of the town was a fortuitous political decision. The commissioners appointed by Governor Cass to select a site for the county seat chose Allen and Rumsey's tract and Cass supported their decision." 2 The Territorial papers mention that in his instructions to the commissioners, Governor Cass had informed them there was no money to buy a site. What better way to encourage immigration to Ann's Arbor than to donate land for the county seat?

Michigan becomes a State

The Ordinance of 1787- the Northwest Ordinance- was drawn up by Congress to deal with problems of the "large area of the Public Domain lying westward to the Mississippi River northwest of the River Ohio." It contained plans for subdividing the area into not less than 3 or more than 5 states. " The Ordinance specified that the boundary line between the three southern and two northern states to be formed should be an east-west line drawn through the bend or extreme of Lake Michigan. This line besides being actually much farther south than it was supposed to be was a purely arbitrary boundary and took no account of the geo-economic needs of the states involved especially as they pertained to harbors in both Lake Michigan and Lake Erie. As a consequence each of the first three states to be formed, Ohio, Indiana and Illinois in turn violated this boundary at the expense of Michigan and Wisconsin which were organized later." 3

Michigan became interested in statehood in 1834. Ohio was already a state with her northern boundary well north of the east-west line established in the Ordinance of 1787. This gave her a narrow strip of land which included the city of Toledo and the harbor at the mouth of the Maumee River. Here lay controversy.

"Feelings ran high. Each state called out its militia and fought what was called the Toledo War. Before any blood was shed, Congress intervened and proposed that Michigan relinquish all claim to the 'Toledo Strip'; then, to compensate for her loss, approximately two- thirds of the Upper Peninsula would be added to Michigan Territory." 4

To seal the compromise the Congress required that a convention of delegates from all parts of Michigan be elected and formally agree to these terms. "The Territorial Legislature authorized the election of the delegates and specified that said convention shall meet in the Court House of the village of Ann Arbor on the second Monday following the election."4 The convention met and by a 28 to 21 vote dissented.

Most citizens were eager for statehood. Governor Mason stated that a second convention could be called by the people. This was done, electing only delegates favoring assent. This second convention met in Ann Arbor on a bitterly cold December 14, 1836. It has since been known as the "Frostbitten Convention". Assent was given to the terms proposed by Congress. The act admitting Michigan to statehood was passed by Congress and signed by President Jackson on January 26, 1837.

This event was commemorated by the erection of an historical marker on the Court House square in 1967 with two young ladies taking part in the ceremonies. Both girls were direct descendents of two men who were delegates to the "Frostbitten Convention", Elisha Congdon and Esek Pray.
